It's "Rough Going" In Reading Room and Open Shelves

This photograph might well have been taken in any library. It illustrates the severe treatment that books are subjected to, and also the urgent need for a cover material that will stand this abuse.

LIBRARY FABRIKOID

BINDING inspectors know only too well what a hard life library books lead! Misuse and abuse in reading rooms . . . rough handling at open shelves . . . such treatment by patrons prematurely shortens the life of library books.

However, there is a way for you to lengthen the life of your book coverings—even under the severest conditions. It is through the use of a sturdy and beautiful new binding material that defies wear and tear. Its name is du Pont Library Fabrikoid. Impregnated with pyroxylin, the same basic substance as that contained in the famous du Pont Duco, Library Fabrikoid is durable, washable and waterproof. It contains no filler to fall out. It is even insect and vermin-proof.

Library Fabrikoid is extremely good looking, too. You can get practically any decorative effect you desire with it. Let us send you further information and samples, so that you may prove these facts for yourself.

FOREWORD

The AMERICAN LIBRARY DIRECTORY has again been revised throughout for 1930 and is expanded, both by the number of libraries added and in the information given about them. Libraries within the United States have been classified in the following categories: (1) Public Libraries, (2) Federal Libraries, State Libraries, and Federal and State Institution Libraries, (3) Libraries of the United States Territories and Dependencies, (4) Educational and Professional Libraries, (5) High School Libraries, and (6) Business and Other Special Libraries. Following these sections are (7) Libraries of Canada and lists of Library Organizations and Library Schools.

(1) Public Libraries. This section includes both tax-supported libraries and those maintained by organizations for the free use of the public; general reference libraries, such as the John Crerar Library in Chicago, which are open to the public; subscription libraries; society libraries, of which the Boston Athenæum is an example; and the few remaining mercantile libraries. Entries for private collections available for use by scholars for specific research, such as the Huntington Library in San Marino, California, and the J. Pierpont Morgan Library in New York, are transferred to the Educational and Professional Libraries section, since their nature seems to determine their placement more than does their availability. A new small class added consists of outstanding branch libraries of county library systems. The governmental libraries in Washington, D. C., have been placed under a new heading, the short phrase for which is Federal and State Libraries.

The arrangement, as in the 1927 DIRECTORY, is alphabetical, first by state and thereunder by city and town. The alphabetical order follows that used in the "Official Postal Guide"—that is, a strictly alphabetical order, with the exception of Mc which precedes Ma. The form of name of the town or city also generally follows that used in the "Guide." After the name of the place is given population. So far as obtainable, these figures have been taken from the preliminary reports of the 1930 census. If new figures were not available, estimated populations or figures from a 1925 state census, where one was taken, or from the 1920 federal census are given. Estimated populations are indicated by an asterisk (*); older census figures are followed by a date in parenthesis.

No references are made from the name of the library except in the case of county libraries; a See reference under the name of the county indicates the location of the library. Under the entry for the county library will be found county population, taken from one of the sources mentioned.

Each list is headed by the state library commission or its equivalent, if there be such, and by the state library if it contains a general collection of books. Statistical data is given in the entry under the name of the city in which the library is located. Strictly state law libraries are to be found in the Federal and State Libraries list.

While the list is much expanded by the addition of libraries and the inclusion of more statistical data, there has been exercised some selection. Very small libraries in very small communities, about which nothing was known, have been excluded. The general standard for inclusion of statistical information has been that the library has a librarian and an income of at least $500, with a minimum book expenditure of $100. If below this standard, the library was omitted or is represented by the name of the library only. However, this standard could not justly be maintained in all cases; any single criterion worked hardship on a representative showing in some states. If a library seemed vigorous, it was sometimes included, even if it failed to meet some part of the standard.

The statistical information is detailed and somewhat expanded over that given in the 1927 DIRECTORY. The earlier features of indicating date of establishment and, by a parenthetical C, a Carnegie library, is retained and extended. Beneath the name of the library will be found the name of the librarian and the names or number of department heads where it has seemed practical to give them. The number of branches is also given. The older statistical features of number of volumes, total income or expenditure, and expenditures for books and periodicals remain. Circulation has been added, thus rounding out a general report for the library. Statistics reported are generally for the last fiscal year, though in some instances the latest accession number was sent for the number of volumes, the year's circulation covered the last twelve months, and estimates were given for revenue and expenditures for a year not yet completed. It has not seemed necessary to indicate these variations. In the few cases where recent information was not supplied, the name of the library has been retained if it met the general standard, with the name of librarian and data to indicate its size.

(2) Federal and State Libraries. This list is new to the DIRECTORY. While in a sense, the Library of Congress and the federal departmental libraries and state law libraries are public libraries, and while, certainly, they are professional libraries, they obviously have characteristics which set them apart. This list seemed advisable, also, because there were other groups which might be included under such a heading—state libraries that are devoted to law and legislative matters and a rather large group of libraries connected with federal and state institutions which had previously been relegated to a miscellaneous group. While the present list is still "miscellaneous," it does serve its purpose of bringing together an important group of libraries supported from various governmental sources.

(3) Libraries in the U. S. Territories and Dependencies. This section has been moved forward in location because it seems logically to follow federal libraries, since there are some governmental libraries in the list. It includes libraries in the outlying regions over which the United States has jurisdiction, so far as these have reported in response to inquiries. No attempt has been made to include in other sections the few libraries of special character scattered throughout these regions; they are all grouped here in one section.

(4) Educational and Professional Libraries. This section includes the libraries of universities, colleges, and normal schools, and separate junior colleges but not high school libraries; law, medical, theological and other special schools; professional societies, as the American Bar Association and the New York Academy of Medicine; art museums, historical societies, and cognate organizations. It also includes, as before indicated, private collections for restricted use by a defined public, and a very few of the libraries before listed as special libraries which requested transfer to this section. Professional schools which are attached to universities have been entered in this division under the university rather than in the list of special libraries. There is no substantial growth in this list, other than that the statistical information is more nearly complete.

(5) High School Libraries. This section is the most greatly changed of all. It includes public high school libraries and those of "prep" schools and academies of high school grade, and libraries which jointly serve high school and junior college. The increase in the number of high school libraries is astonishing. As standards vary from state to state, no criterion for inclusion could be worked out. This list may fairly claim to be "representative" if by no means complete. Those included are all functioning and growing, the majority of them having full-time, professionally trained, librarians or at least teacher-librarians.

(6) Business and Other Special Libraries. This section, as its title indicates, has been limited to libraries connected with business concerns or cognate organizations, including those serving special groups, such as clubs. The libraries of professional schools and associations, sometimes classed with special libraries, will be found in the Educational and Professional Libraries section.

(7) Libraries of Canada. In this section will be found a revised and somewhat expanded list of libraries given in the 1927 DIRECTORY. Those of each province, of whatever character, have been included in a single alphabet under the name of the province.

Special Collections. There were so few changes in Special Collections indicated in the reports that it has not seemed necessary to repeat this information. If no changes were reported, the fact is indicated by "SPEC. COLLS: See 1928 Supplement," that volume being still in print. Note, however, has been made in this present DIRECTORY of new libraries with collections, new collections in libraries before reported, and deletions or changes as directed in the reports.

Library Organizations and Schools. These lists vary in their organization and natures from those of the 1927 DIRECTORY.

The classified lists of library organizations have been arranged in a single alphabet, thus making the section simpler to use. It includes national, regional and local library organizations in the United States, Canada, and the Possessions. The officers listed are incumbents for the current year. A few clubs which have been reported dormant have been dropped.

Data about the library schools is not so elaborate as it was in the DIRECTORY for 1927. Much of the detailed information to be found in that volume is still useful, but a late catalog from the school itself will be more dependable. This present list is arranged according to a short title, in italics, by which the library school is ordinarily known, followed by the official title of the school with the date of organization and location. The information given in the present DIRECTORY consists of the name of the active administrator of the library school and such essentials as minimum requirements for admission, nature of the courses offered, and kind of degree or certificate granted. There is no indication as to whether the school is accredited or not by the Board of Education for Librarianship of the American Library Association; an official list of accredited and provisionally accredited library schools may be obtained from the Association. Information has been taken from the list for the DIRECTORY.

Notes of omissions and errors are invited. All reports have been carefully checked, but a volume of such elaborate detail can merely aspire to perfection. It is hoped that none of the defects will prove embarrassing. Special thanks are due to most state commissions and state libraries for their generous help in supplying information about the libraries of their states, and to officials of such organizations as the American Library Association and the Special Library Associations for their cordial cooperation.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES IN THE UNITED STATES

Public Libraries in the United States

This list includes, in addition to tax-supported libraries and others maintained by organizations for the general use of the public, semi-public libraries of which general use is permitted with restrictions. Libraries are alphabetized under each state by the name of the city or town, and each state list is headed by the name of the library commission or comparable agency, and of the state library if it contains a general collection of books; otherwise, it will be found in the list of Federal and State Libraries.

Population figures are from the 1930 census, so far as they have been obtainable from the United States Bureau of the Census; the remainder are taken from the 1920 federal census, the 1925 state census (in some states, indicated by a date in parenthesis) or the latest estimated population, marked with an (*). Library statistics are, for the most part, for the last fiscal year of the library; otherwise, the most recent available. The Foreword contains a further note on this statistical information.

Federal Libraries, State Libraries, and Institution Libraries

This list includes the Library of Congress, the libraries of federal departments and bureaus, state libraries, state public library agencies, state departmental libraries, libraries of federal and state courts and libraries of federal and state institutions. It does not include libraries that are connected with federal and state educational institutions, which will be found among the Educational and Professional libraries. For the most part, statistical information is given here for the libraries listed, the general exception being the state libraries with general collections of books and state public library agencies, statistics for which are given under public libraries

Educational and Professional Libraries

This list excludes high school libraries, recorded in the next section, but covers, besides universities, colleges, and normal schools, other professional schools, whether independent or associated with universities, in which latter case they are included with other departments under the name of the university. The list includes, also, professional societies and cognate institutions—such as historical societies, art museums and the like, often classified as special libraries—general collections available only for scholarly research, and some special libraries which requested transfer to this section.

Business and Other Special Libraries

This list covers chiefly libraries connected with business organizations—but the term is used to include not only firms and commercial organizations but also clubs and social organizations which were previously listed in a "Miscellaneous" section, now abandoned. The libraries of professional institutions and some of the federal departmental libraries, while "special libraries," are covered respectively in previous sections. A few special libraries requested transfer elsewhere. The common feature of this group is that collections are generally maintained to supply material to a specified group, sometimes in a specific field, and are, for the most part, available only to members of that group. However, some of the libraries are open to some extent to the public. Note has been made if this fact is known; otherwise, it may be assumed that the collections are available only to the group for which they were created.

LIBRARY SCHOOLS

Library Schools

This list is arranged alphabetically according to the short form of name in common usage, indicated by italics. Information given, in addition to the date of establishment, the location, and the names of the administrative officers of the library schools, consists of (1) Minimum requirements for admission, (2) Curriculum, (3) Degree or certificate given. In almost all schools, scholarships and loan funds are available for the aid of students. Useful detailed information, including a brief history of each school then listed, may be found in the 1927 Directory. A folder of condensed information about library schools, accredited and provisionally accredited by the Board of Education for Librarianship, may be had from the American Library Association, 520 North Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Late detailed information can best be secured from the schools themselves.
